

Story 1:

The banking regulator in your country announced that it will open consumer protection bureaus nationwide after many investors complained about the aggressive sales techniques in the banking sector.

Story 2:

A famous male actor in your country says he decided to file a lawsuit against his two daughters who are managing his finances. He says they are illegally taking his fortune away from him.

Story 3:

The most popular social media platform in your country unveiled a new “family protection” function in which parents can tie their accounts to their children’s, which gives them the ability to control their children’s privacy settings.

Story 4:

A motorist rammed his vehicle into a group of people waiting in line at a food stand in your community, injuring at least three.

Story 5:

A tennis player from your country lost in the fourth round match at Wimbledon. You may not be interested in tennis personally, of course, but you should also think about whether other people, especially your news audience, would be interested or not.

Story 6:

A group of medical scientists in your country just published an academic paper that indicates there is no health benefit to drinking orange juice in the morning.